of locomotion, and nothing can surpass its ease and elegance of such movements. The animal is able to move in any direction; the water; the funnel is at work below, and hydraulic engine, ejecting the water, which is the part of a front rudder and directs the way. It also moves forward by means of the lateral fins, which are expanded and retracted by means of the side-fins or the expansions of the mantle; it can also use its arms and its head downward. The backward motion is its least, which is that which is most graceful and powerful. The arms are folded together under the water its arms were folded together. When grasping its prey, the tentacles, which are endowed with a high degree of muscularity, and as quickly as a whip could be raised and lowered, the extremity of the arm, covered with suckers, seizes the object by the suckers, the pistons of the suckers are compressed, and the denticulated edges are pressed with enormous force on the surface of the victim. Then the arms are raised, and the morsel is drawn from that corpse-like embrace there is no escape. Altogether, the gigantic cuttle-fish is a great deep. In a future communication we shall describe further particulars of this extraordinary creature.

The steamer Corvus, from St. John's, New foundland, arrived at this port yesterday morning, and was the first vessel that has been scuried. It lies in a cask about the size of a sugar hogshead, the arms coiled about the sides of the vessel, and the head and neck are one of the first things discharged from the vessel this morning, and it is stated, was the first thing that was seen at the New York aquarium, where it will doubtless be once placed upon exhibition.

A Wife's Revenge.

Some one ago a letter was received by a family on Long Island, containing the following remarkable story: A man by the name of Glenn, living in Missouri, who, having become very much incensed that his wife, Eliza Baker, expressed the wish that she became a widow, and that she would die till the day of judgment. It appears that his desires were not granted, but he was since, with the exception of his eyes, which are constantly in motion. No person can appear before him without being subjected to a
